DEAR COLLEAGUES

Our sector is under immense pressure, its value called into question. As proud leaders of our organisations we should see this as a core, shared challenge and unite to address it.

We know the impact we can and are having, beyond the current narrative. I think about Suheil Tandon, who's a Loughborough alum and won an India High Achievers award in 2023. Suheil runs an award-winning social enterprise in India which uses sport to aid the development of thousands of children and young people, especially from marginalised and underprivileged backgrounds.

Our research too is delivering major advances in solving the most significant challenges of our time. At Loughborough we're focussed on doing this through green hydrogen acceleration, working with our regional partners to help the government achieve its ambition of 35% of energy from hydrogen by 2050.

The world can't wait. And neither can we. 🌐

Our Vice-Chancellor, Professor Nick Jennings, has written an open letter to the sector asking that we collectively take a stand and change the narrative that's currently so damaging to higher education.

He asks the UK's universities to turn the tide and shape a narrative that's truly reflective of the wide-ranging impact we have on individuals, regions and countries worldwide.

A powerful message. I am delighted to see that Loughborough University has joined the Times Higher Education Impact Rankings - which demonstrate universities' social and economic impact beyond the more traditional metrics of reputation and research. A great way to evidence and to showcase real-world social impact.

Generalist vague meaning only is conveyed by word 'Higher' education. Education now has enlarged its scopes with innumerable special subjects & very large volumes to read in each subject, enough to spend ones whole life studying it's details. Students often go by fancy & later on end up realising its uselessness.

No amount of investment in military spending can permanently end wars, and no amount of capital development can fundamentally solve employment and economic problems. We need to never stop accumulating human wisdom and exploring future possibilities in order to determine human survival in an uncertain world. Universities are relays of human wisdom and windows for exploring future possibilities. It's hard for me to disagree with Professor Jennings' call. The world needs to change, and it needs positive and breakthrough changes. Even if these changes may be small, it is better than repeating the cycle of history without any progress.

 My alma mater spilling the teal Tory policies in no small part contributing to the destruction of UKHE 🇬🇧

Our ability to attract international students is becoming increasingly challenging. UK universities have long been the preferred choice for many international students, who are attracted by the opportunity to gain a high-quality education at some of the best universities in the world. Initiatives such as the Graduate Student Visa route – which allows international students to stay in the UK for at least two years after completing their course – have been major contributors in the number of students opting for the UK.

From January 2024, however, the families of many international postgraduate students are no longer allowed to apply to live in the UK. A further package of measures, including a rise in the skilled salary threshold and a review of the Graduate Route Visa, are due to come into effect this spring. This will have a detrimental impact on the sector. Indeed, a recent Universities UK survey found that enrolments in postgraduate taught courses at 70 universities were down by more than 40% since these changes were introduced.

STATE OF THE SECTOR PANEL EVENT – 26 JULY 2024

Universities under fire – how can UK higher education change the narrative and demonstrate its undeniable impact?

As a direct result of the VC's letter to the sector, Loughborough brought the debate to life by hosting a virtual roundtable discussion, facilitated by Phil Baty, Global Editor at Times Higher Education. The discussion featured key leaders including Vivienne Stern, Chief Executive of Universities UK; Nick Jennings, Vice Chancellor and President of Loughborough University; Lisa Roberts, Vice Chancellor and Chief Executive of the University of Exeter; and Nishan Canagarajah, President and Vice Chancellor of the University of Leicester.

Universities are in deep financial crisis, with mass cuts and potential institutional failures. How can we collectively change the narrative to earn the public and political support we need for the sector - not just to survive in the short term, but to thrive long term?

The video recording of this vital and timely panel discussion about how universities can win the challenging arguments about their worth and value, in the face of relentless attacks, is now live. It is about the UK sector, but has resonance much more globally. You can view it here: <https://lnkd.in/d/Ru-Ev5H>

Vivienne Stern, chief executive of Universities UK, said that we have got to "reset the narrative" around who benefits from higher education, to move "from the idea of universities as a private good to something which is essential national infrastructure which conveys great public benefit."
