Dear Alumni, Students, Faculty and Staff:

By participating today, you further the pioneering history of Rutgers Law School's Minority Student Program. Our daytime colloquium introduces you to today's MSP students, reflects on the Program's first 50 years through the experiences of past MSP deans, explores our faculty's current engagement in issues of social justice and suggests some avenues for the Program's future. Our evening banquet embellishes these themes in a reflective and celebratory setting.

It is rightful that we apply the adjective "historic" to MSP. Our alumni have been members of Congress, judges, cabinet officials at both the federal and state level, leaders of nationwide civil rights, civil liberties and social justice organizations, senior leaders in institutions of higher education and members of the practicing bar who in their daily lives promote the lessons of equality, opportunity and social justice that MSP inculcated in each of us. MSP still makes history: With the merger of the Camden and Newark law schools, MSP is now flourishing at the Camden location, which now has first and second year students, many of whom are here today.

As proud as we are of the MSP's 50 historic years of achievement, we all know that no institution can remain static, and a program especially dedicated to inculcating positive social change must adapt to challenges and circumstances that were unknown in 1968. Today is therefore also a time for all of us who have been part of this remarkable movement in legal education to reflect on where MSP should go from here. Together, we have built a formidable instrument of empowerment and social direction. The question before us now is how best to utilize what we have built so that it can be just as relevant when our successors celebrate the centennial of MSP in 2068.

One of our goals in MSP 50 is to provide a networking opportunity for 200+ current MSP students.

Alumni: We ask each returning alumnus/a to talk to at least five students and to give them your business card or contact information. This can start during the day and continue in the evening, where each table will have 1-2 students. Your guidance and experience can help launch their careers, and such networking is an essential component of the MSP experience.

In addition, during the past year we have engaged in the “quiet” phase of a $1.5 million capital campaign to create 12 endowed summer internships for MSP students to work in public interest organizations or government positions that might not otherwise be available to them due to financial constraints. To date, we have raised more than half—$865,000—from just seven individuals and two firms, all building on the MSP Alumni Endowment Fund spearheaded by key alumni more than a decade ago. We urge alumni to pay it forward by giving now or pledging for future years gifts that are significant for your circumstances. Further details are on page 39 of this booklet.

Students, Faculty and Staff: Your job is to approach and engage those who came before you, keep the history alive within the institution among faculty and ensure the narrative remains a living one.

Finally, this is an occasion to renew past bonds with classmates and meet others with whom you share experiences and interests. Enjoy!

Sincerely yours,

Dear Friends:

It is with great pleasure that I extend greetings to everyone gathered for the 50th anniversary celebration of the Minority Student Program for Rutgers Law School. It is indeed noteworthy that while the reputation for academic excellence for Rutgers Law is well-known, the many accomplishments of its alumni community deserves equal recognition. As Minority Student Program alumni, you distinguished yourselves through your professionalism, dedication and ongoing support of this institution. All those in attendance this evening deserve recognition for demonstrating the level of excellence that has become synonymous with Rutgers Law.

Tonight’s event is an opportune time to also recognize the many accomplishments and contributions the MSP program has made throughout the past 50 years. Originally geared toward students of color, the program is now open to any student who can demonstrate a history of socioeconomic or educational disadvantage. By taking a proactive approach to help students succeed, the program offers legal skills development, academic support, alumni mentoring and networking and internships to students who may not otherwise have had the opportunity to pursue a legal career. I applaud the MSP program for its advocacy and dedication toward promoting the best and brightest legal minds in our State.

Congratulations on this milestone anniversary, and best wishes for an enjoyable and memorable event.

My very best,

Philip D. Murphy

Dear Students, Alumni, Faculty, Staff, and Friends:

It is my pleasure to join you in celebrating the 50th anniversary of the Minority Student Program at Rutgers Law School. This milestone is a perfect opportunity to reflect on the tremendous impact that this program has had on the lives of 2,500 alumni and the benefits it is providing to current MSP students.

The Rutgers of 2018 has a strong and proud identity as a university of opportunity, where students from all races, ethnic origins, and income levels can learn from a world-class faculty and embark upon lives and careers of achievement. But that identity did not develop overnight, and it did not come without struggle. It happened because of the leadership of faculty and administrators who worked hard to establish programs like MSP and to gain support for them across the university and the wider community. We are indebted to those who pioneered the Minority Student Program and those who built it into a national model for giving students of color and disadvantaged students of all races the means by which to prepare for, enter, and flourish in a legal career.

The fact that MSP alumni are succeeding in a wide range of law-related professions is testament to the quality of this program. And the strong participation by these women and men as alumni mentors and alumni panelists is further proof of their appreciation for the difference it has made for them. To everyone who has contributed to MSP's success over the past 50 years, I offer my thanks and admiration.

Best wishes for a memorable event and, again, Happy 50th Anniversary!

Sincerely,

Robert Barchi

Dear Friends,

I would like to extend my warmest greetings to the Minority Student Program at Rutgers Law School as you come together to celebrate 50 years of empowering and educating students.

The Minority Student Program (MSP) has enabled Rutgers Law School to achieve its long standing commitment to diversity, inclusion and equal opportunity in law school attendance. Created in 1968 in response to some of America's darkest days for race relations, MSP is a nationally recognized model for educating and preparing students of color and disadvantaged students of all races for a legal career. The MSP has been dedicated to the inclusion of students from groups that have historically been under-represented in the legal profession.

The MSP creates an environment where all students can learn and develop the skills they will need for success. From providing internship and service opportunities to networking and mentoring with alumni, the program strives to prepare students for both a rewarding academic career as well as a promising future in law. The program has graduated many successful alumni, who I know are as grateful as I am to have been a part of something that has touched the lives and continues to touch be a part of what makes Rutgers such an exceptional school.

As an alumni of the Minority Student Program, I understand just what this program entails, and how much good it does for those who wish to pursue an education in law. Without this program, I may never have gotten to where I am today; so I would like to personally thank those who created the program as well as those who continue to uphold its mission. I have long prioritized education as a means to provide long term success for our nation and a brighter future for young people. To all the students, faculty and alumni, I hope this celebration is an enlightening and joyful experience.

Sincerely,

Dear Friends,

It is a pleasure to extend my warmest greetings and congratulations as you gather to celebrate the 50th anniversary of Rutgers Law School's Minority Student Program (MSP). I am confident that today's program will serve as an outstanding resource for MSP alumni and current students pursuing careers in the legal field.

For half a century, MSP has helped to support law students with summer internships, alumni mentorship programs, and a plethora of networking opportunities. Thanks to MSP's important work, Rutgers School of Law continues to play an invaluable role in shaping the next generation of diverse legal professionals. The fact that MSP continues to thrive is a testament to the hard work and dedication of its leadership and the passion of its membership.

As you reflect on the past five decades, please accept my very best wishes as you continue building on MSP's well-deserved reputation as an incredible support network.

Dear Faculty, Staff, Students, and Alumni:

Congratulations to Rutgers Law School, faculty, students, and alumni for fifty years of pioneering diversity in the legal field through the Minority Student Program.

Rutgers Law School initiated its Minority Student Program during a pivotal period for social justice in the United States. In 1967, rebellions broke out in Newark and other communities of color that had been plagued by systemic discrimination, racial profiling, and unemployment. Less than a year later, in April 1968, a white supremacist assassinated Martin Luther King, Jr. And at that summer's Olympics, two African-American medalists raised their fists in a human rights salute to protest racial discrimination. It was in the wake of these crucial events in race relations that Rutgers launched the Minority Student Program.

The Minority Student Program was — and remains — a groundbreaking program for legal education and the legal profession. Throughout the history of law in the United States, people from diverse backgrounds have been underrepresented. They remain underrepresented today. That is what makes the Rutgers Law School Minority Student Program so important. It is a model for educating and preparing students of color and disadvantaged students of all races for a successful career in law.

I commend the Rutgers Law School Minority Student Program for its fifty years of success. During those fifty years, the program has helped more than 2,500 people pursue their dreams in law. The legal profession throughout New Jersey and the United States owes a debt of gratitude to Rutgers Law School for its innovative Minority Student Program. I wish Rutgers Law School, the Minority Student Program, and everyone who has played a part in this endeavor many more years of accomplishment.

Best wishes,

Donald M. Payne, Jr.
Member of Congress

Speaker Biographies

Rutgers University– Newark Chancellor Nancy Cantor

Nancy Cantor is Chancellor of Rutgers University–Newark, a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and member of the National Academy of Medicine. She is recognized internationally as a champion for universities to embrace their role as anchor institutions and for inclusive excellence, having been closely involved in the defense of affirmative action in the 2003 Supreme Court cases Grutter and Gratz while provost at the University of Michigan. She earned her B.A. from Sarah Lawrence College and her Ph.D. from Stanford University.

Co-Deans Ronald Chen and Michael Cahill

Ronald Chen is Co-Dean of Rutgers Law School, a Distinguished Professor of Law and the Judge Leonard I. Garth Scholar. He has served as vice dean, acting dean, dean and co-dean at the school for 18 years and been a member of the faculty since 1987. From 2006–2010, he was the Public Advocate of New Jersey, and previously was an associate with Cravath, Swaine & Moore. Recently, he was named general counsel of the American Civil Liberties Union. Chen received his B.A. from Dartmouth College and his J.D. from Rutgers Law School, where he participated in the Minority Student Program. Later, he briefly served as MSP dean.

Michael T. Cahill is Co-Dean of Rutgers Law School. Before coming to Rutgers in July 2016, he taught at Brooklyn Law School from 2003–2016 (serving as vice dean from 2010–2015), and at Chicago-Kent

College of Law from 2002–2003. Cahill's scholarship focuses primarily on criminal law, though he has also written and taught courses about health law and policy. His criminal law work includes three books (co-authored Paul H. Robinson), numerous articles and book chapters, and involvement with two state criminal-code reform projects. Cahill received a B.A. from Yale University and J.D. and M.P.P. degrees from the University of Michigan.

The Minority Student Program at 50

Still a Centerpiece of Rutgers Law School

Paul Tractenberg, Professor Emeritus

The Minority Student Program was born 50 years ago, in 1968, out of strife and dissatisfaction, but with hope for a better future. The 1967 rebellions in Newark, Detroit and other American cities planted the seeds, and the national and state responses nurtured the embryonic development. This was both a painful time and one of heightened aspirations for Americans and New Jerseyans of color.

Rutgers Law School in Newark was at the eye of the storm. It occupied a relatively new building in downtown Newark on the developing Rutgers–Newark campus. In a sense, it was of the city and had been since its predecessor law schools were first established there in 1908.

From the start, its student body differed from those of most American law schools of the day, reflecting immigrant groups, those whose families didn't have a tradition of attending schools of higher education, and even women at a time when that was unheard of in legal education.

But the Rutgers Law faculty and student body of the 1960s bore little resemblance to the emerging population of Newark. Both faculty members and students were overwhelmingly white and male. The law school was a highly visible white bastion in an increasingly black city. Indeed, Ackerson Hall, its new home on University Avenue, looked rather like a fortress designed to protect its inhabitants against hostile forces outside.

The events of 1967 could have led Rutgers Law to turn even more inward, away from the city outside its walls. The wonder is that that did not happen. A major part of the credit goes to the handful of black students in attendance at the law school and at the undergraduate program on the Rutgers-Newark campus. They used various tactics, some of them highly confrontational such as the takeover of Conklin Hall by the undergraduate Black Organization of Students and the formal indictment of the law school by the Association of Black Law Students (ABLS), to force the rest of the Rutgers community to confront complex and difficult issues.

Fortunately, they found some kindred spirits on the faculty and in the law school and university administration. First among them was the law school's dean Willard Heckel, a champion of human and civil rights. Heckel was the head of Newark's anti-poverty agency, the United Community Corporation, and the national moderator of the Presbyterian Church. In the late 1960s, he led the law school forward to confront the challenges of the day with kindness, calmness and decency, but also with forceful leadership.

To understand the scope of the challenges the law school faced then, you need to know that in 1967 of 2,500 undergraduate students at Rutgers-Newark, only 62 were black—and just a few years earlier there were only 20. At the law school, the situation was no better. Between 1960 and 1967, a total of only 12 nonwhite students graduated. Since Rutgers Law School was a major preparer of New Jersey lawyers, it was hardly surprising that, as of 1969, there were fewer than 60 African-American attorneys among 8,000 lawyers practicing in the state, and even fewer Hispanic and Asian-American attorneys.

The Minority Student Program was the most direct response to that gross imbalance, but it was only one aspect of the law school's transformation in the late 1960s. The curriculum was overhauled, clinical education got a more secure foothold at Rutgers Law than at most law schools, and a schoolwide commitment was made to imbue all students with a determination to use law to advance the public good.

In the spring of 1968, the faculty of Rutgers Law School in Newark voted to implement a plan for admitting black students starting that fall—the Minority Student Program or MSP. As described in A Centennial History of Rutgers Law School in Newark: Opening a Thousand Doors:

The plan was to reserve 20 seats for black students of a total of 150 in the entering class. Actually, that September, 23 black students were admitted under the special program standard [of the Minority Student Program]. Two months later, in November 1968, the school committed itself to a five-year “plan to double the number of negro and minority group attorneys in the state of New Jersey. The plan [would] cost $498,400, mainly for scholarships” and would seek to graduate at least one hundred black students over the five years.

Despite the law school's commitment to the MSP—or perhaps because of it, by the fall of 1969 the fledgling Association of Black Law Students moved boldly to reshape Rutgers Law, and, with it, American legal education. On November 4, 1969, Association of Black Law Students published a detailed “Indictment of the Law School Community,” pressing for a total overhaul of the law school curriculum and for a plan to attract more African-American students and faculty. Strikingly, the Indictment came on the heels of the law school having acted in 1968 to expand the curriculum to include courses and seminars such as Legal Representation of the Poor, Social Legislation, Urban Poverty, and Consumer Credit and the Poor. But the ABLS Indictment made the case for why that was not enough because the curriculum still protected “the private interests of white society...far more thoroughly...than the private interests of Black people.”

The very next day, November 5, 1969, the law school cancelled all classes and convened a day of deliberation at which the faculty, student body and administration would consider the ABLS Indictment. An immediate result was the establishment of a Tripartite Commission comprised of three members each representing the ABLS, the Student Bar Association and the faculty to address the Indictment.

Six months later, on May 6, 1970, the Tripartite Commission issued its “Strategy for Change,” which recommended far-reaching changes in the way the law school operated. This included major curricular changes, such as the development of extensive clinical education programs. The Tripartite Commission urged that the changes be put in place immediately and that an Implementation Task Force be created. That very day, the entire law school community voted to approve the Strategy for Change. And substantial change did come to the law school, perhaps not to the full extent envisioned by the Tripartite Commission, but still to a degree unprecedented in American legal education.

In the years between 1970 and 1978, Rutgers Law School and the MSP flowered. Among the major gardeners were professors Frank Askin and Alfred Slocum. Both were Rutgers law graduates and devoted supporters of the MSP from its start—or even before. To a very real extent, they planted and nourished the seeds

Those were the incredibly exciting years of the “People’s Electric Law School,” and the initial influx of students of color grew apace. As early as 1971, about 20% of the law school’s student body consisted of black students. In short order, the target increased to 25% and was achieved, and the program was expanded to include other students of color.

To maintain its momentum, Rutgers Law School and the MSP had to overcome two major challenges in the next 20 years—the U.S. Supreme Court’s 1978 decision in the Bakke case and an United States Office of Civil Rights (OCR) inquiry in 1997. Either could have signaled the end of MSP, but neither did. Either could have resulted in the law school defending MSP as it was then constituted “to the death,” but in both cases the law school thought “outside of the box” and reacted counter-intuitively. And in both instances, the law school community responded as it had in 1968 and 1969, as a broad community of faculty, students and administrators whose collective priority was to find a way to save the important program it had so daringly created in the 60s and nurtured thereafter.

When the U.S. Supreme Court’s divided decision in Bakke struck down “racial quotas” or “set-asides” as unconstitutional, but permitted race to be used as a “plus factor” in an otherwise racially neutral process, many universities and law schools reacted by paring back, if not eliminating, their affirmative action efforts. Rutgers Law’s ingenious response was embodied in a faculty resolution that was adopted by a vote of 34–3. It provided: “That the current Minority Student Program be expanded to 30% [of the entering class] and that the term ‘minority’ be understood to include disadvantaged whites.”

Then, in 1997 OCR contacted Rutgers in connection with a complaint it had received about the law school’s two-track admissions system. By then, the law had changed to call into question such an admissions approach. Still, there were those who wanted to tough it out, believing that the law school’s admissions system could be successfully defended. The weight of faculty opinion had shifted, however, to the view that we had to move to a single-track admissions system.

The challenge, however, presented to a special study committee co-chaired by Professors Paul Tractenberg and Charles Jones, was to identify a single-track system that could maintain both the law school’s impressive student diversity profile and its numerical index based on LSAT scores and UGPA. To many, this seemed like “Mission Impossible.”

Once again, though, Rutgers Law ingenuity carried the day. The simple idea that won overwhelming faculty support—proposed by MSP Dean Janice Robinson on behalf of a literally speechless Professor Tractenberg (he had laryngitis)—was to add two boxes to the application for admission. This allowed each applicant, regardless of race, ethnicity or socioeconomic status, to indicate whether he or she preferred to have either numerical or non-numerical factors be treated as the strongest indicator of admissibility to the law school. That weighting preference was honored although every applicant was evaluated based on all the factors presented in the application.

The result of this approach was to create a single track admissions system with multiple members of the admissions committee, including the MSP dean, reviewing all applications. Race was one of many factors considered in the law school’s in-depth, holistic review of all applications. The Minority Student Program has continued as a vibrant and popular post-admission support system for students who choose to participate.

This system has enabled Rutgers Law to maintain its diversity profile and its academic standing. Participation in MSP has been stable at about 30% each year, and the percentage of students of color in the law school as a whole is close to 40%. This was all achieved despite changes in federal equal protection law that made reaching results like these more difficult.

Another exciting expansion of MSP occurred in 2015 when, as a result of the merger with the Rutgers School of Law–Camden, we were able to launch MSP at our Camden location. We now have a growing number of MSP students in Camden who join the over 190 MSP students in Newark. Both locations provide a rich program that helps their students succeed in law school, develop important relationships with our more than 2,500 MSP alumni, and obtain meaningful summer and post-graduation legal work.

As we celebrate its 50th anniversary, Rutgers Law School can point to a proud, vibrant and still very much needed MSP. Let’s all raise our glasses to that wonderful accomplishment. It has greatly enriched our law school, our state and our nation. As we celebrate the MSP’s remarkable history, let’s also look forward to its future contributions.

DIFFERENT PERSPECTIVES CREATE
MASTERPIECES

Kelley Drye is proud to support Rutgers Law School as it celebrates the 50th Anniversary of its Minority Student Program (MSP)

MSP Camden

MSP Newark CLASS OF 2020

Once Upon A Time

Commemorating MSP

Marcia Wilson Brown '94

On the occasion of the 32nd anniversary of the Minority Student Program (MSP), April 2000.

Once upon a time and long ago

There was a kingdom (or school if you are not into fables) called Rut-gers
In a place called New-Ark
In a building called New-House
Where people came to learn about
 The rule of law and the
 The search for Just-us.
So it was said. Let it be heard.

In the kingdom called Rut-gers
There was a Dean to watch over the whole kingdom,
A court filled with barristers to help run the joint,
With advice and consent from the Council of Esteemed Judges or those better known as "faculty," and input from the people of the kingdom better known as the "people electric"
Together they learned about the rule of law and the search for justice.
And so it was said. Let it be heard.

Well, the kingdom lived long and prospered
Highly regarded in the land.
And although most of the people were of
 The same culture
 And spoke the same language
 And shared the same sex
 And wore the same complexion

For a time, everyone looked around the kingdom and saw that it was good.
But soon, throughout the land, the waters were troubled
The people of the land who were outside the kingdom began marching outside the kingdom doors
They cried out to the kingdom saying "rise up against the tyranny of the law"
And they shouted "justice for all"
And they marched:
 For open doors
 And open minds
 And conscious
 And principle.

And for the first time that anyone really knew
The people of the kingdom called Rut-gers
Looked around and saw that all was not good.
For the kingdom that prospered and taught the rule of law and urged a search for justice did not hold all of the faces and all of the voices of the people of the land.
And so they were challenged by the outsiders, chided by the insiders and fearful for the future, especially when the man called "Dreamer" was eliminated...

And so they stopped. And the kingdom went silent, while the dean and the court and the council of esteemed judges and the people electric went into deep reflection

And after a time, the people of the kingdom called for a new day
And they proclaimed that just-us must become just-is (the root word of justice), and that history must go forward and they decided to build a better kingdom
 And a place within a place was born
 And the kingdom went on a new journey
 With new faces and old faces
 With similar voices and different voices
 With common language and other languages

And this place within a place was called MSP (Many Smart People)

So it was said. Let it be heard.

And through the years of creating the place within a place, the kingdom never stopped prospering

The wonderful, magical, difficult, challenging, painful, progressive, changing years, when the people of the kingdom came to learn the reasons why and the arguments for and against and to reconcile the rule of law with A sense of community
 And race
 And class
 And culture

And how to grapple with the question "what is the value of a human being" in an era where even DNA is a market commodity"

Well...MSP thrived and the place within a place produced
 A new court
 New barristers
 New judges

And people who created new fertile areas and expanded the rule of law across the land to accommodate all of the people, all of the faces, all of the voices, and all of the hopes and defeated the one called Destroyer who came to the land to deny Rutgers and other kingdoms a place within a place

And through sung and unsung, named and unnamed, MSP birthed a diaspora that blossomed and burst forth with a passion for change and excellence
 And a glorious mantra issued forth: The people's Electric Law School live long and prosperous!
 In a place called New-House
 In a city called New-Ark
 In a kingdom called Rutgers
 And so it was said. Let it be heard.

MSP Alumni Endowment Fund Capital Campaign

Statement of Intent

I, _____, hereby pledge to Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, the sum of $ _____ to support the Minority Student Program (MSP) Alumni Endowment Fund.

My gift will be paid in installments over a period of not more than five years. The first installment of $ _____ will be transferred to the Rutgers University Foundation on or before December 31, 2018. It is my intention to satisfy the balance of the pledge thereafter in subsequent annual installments according to the following schedule:

$ _____ on or before December 31, 2019
$ _____ on or before December 31, 2020
$ _____ on or before December 31, 2021
$ _____ on or before December 31, 2022

However, I reserve the right to amend the amount or timing of payments at my discretion, provided that my pledge is paid in full not later than December 31, 2022.

My pledge payments will be made payable to the Rutgers University Foundation and mailed to the foundation at 120 Albany Street, New Brunswick, New Jersey 08901.

It is my hope that my gift may inspire other alumni and friends of Rutgers to support the university. I understand that a portion of my gift may be used to fund advancement efforts at Rutgers and that this fee will be applied as each pledge installment is received.

Further, Rutgers may publicize my gift as the opportunity arises and may include my name among those of other donors in lists that are published by the university.
