

THE BEST TEACHERS ARE SAINTS!

At Siena, the art of teaching is steeped in a tradition that reaches back centuries — one shaped by the enduring legacy of the Franciscan Friars. Since the time of St. Francis of Assisi, Franciscans have championed education as a path to spiritual growth, social justice, and the common good. From founding some of the first universities in medieval Europe to building schools in underserved communities around the globe, the Franciscan commitment to learning has always emphasized not just academic excellence, but the formation of the whole person — mind, heart, and spirit.

Our graduates don't just teach, they inspire and strive to be that spark for the next generation. Inspired by the professors and friars who once walked with them on campus, our alumni teachers now walk with their own students, bringing light and purpose into the lives of others. In doing so, they remind us that the best teachers aren't just educators — they are Saints in action.

IS THE CLASSROOM YOUR CALLING?

Siena offers five graduate education programs, including the MAT, plus extensions and certificates of advanced study. Some programs can be done entirely online, meaning you can complete the degree requirements in the comfort of your home while taking advantage of Siena's signature support network. No matter where you are in your teaching journey (including the very beginning!), Siena now offers a program for you.

Siena created its Office of Graduate Programs in 2024, and in just one year, enrollment across Siena's graduate programs has doubled. In addition to the new education programs, Siena added an MS in business analytics last year and a master of social work will launch this fall. For more information, contact the office at graduateadmissions@siena.edu. John Bond is the office's inaugural director and Doreen Morris serves as assistant director. They're both happy to answer questions and tell you more about the exciting graduate programs — which can be completed in person or fully online — at Siena!
